What is a microhydropower turbine?

Microhydropower turbines A turbine is the 'heart' of any hydropower project because it converts hydraulic power into mechanical power. The turbine is made up of a rotating element (technically known as runner) and a stationary element. Energy conversion process takes place in the runner that is made up of an assembly of blades on a disc.

Which micro-hydro turbine should I choose for my MHP plant?

The turbine for a particular MHP plant depends on the site characteristics, such as head and power. There are many micro-hydro turbines that are being used; among them is the cross-flow turbine. Cross-flow turbine (Fig. 8) is a good choice for high-to-medium head application as it is robust and easy to manufacture.
